A New Feature of the Postoffice at Forest City.

Special to the Scranton Tribune, FOREST CITY, Pa., Feb. 1.—Through the untiring efforts of our hustling postmaster, Frank Cunningham, jr., information was received at this postoffice from the postoffice department at Washington, placing this office upon the list of international money order offices. An office of this kind means the issuing of money orders for foreign countries. Heretofore, parties in this place were compelled to go to Carbondale for these orders.

The offices are established at the beginning of each quarter, so the office here will begin issuing about the first of April.

How an Investment of 10 Cents Per Day May Purchase a Whole Library. The poor man or woman should understand that the edition of the Encyclopedia Britannica which we are offering is an excellent work, and is an exact reproduction of the original Elinburgh edition, and that it is offered at the exceedingly favorable terms of only 10 cents per day. This is so low that almost any person may procure the work, which is, in fact, an entire library within itself. But one condition is imposed upon the pur chaser, and that is that he shall be a subscriber for THE TRIBUNE

She Talks Very Frankly and Earnestly to the Writer.

JUST WHAT SHE SAYS

One of the Most Serious of Conditions and How Light Came

Out of Darkness.

On the afternoon of Sunday, Jan. 7. the writer gave interested attention to the narration which follows. It is here reproduced almost exactly in the vords of the lady from whose lips it fell-Mrs. S. B. Cook, of 250 Tompkins Avenue, Brooklyn, N. Y. Her hus-band, Mr. S. B. Cook, has for many years held a responsible position in the Registered Letter Department of the New York Post-office,

We three sat at the front windows of their home overlooking the park, as Mrs. Cook gave this leaflet of her life, one of her little children nestling

Should confirmation of our report be desired Mr. Cook will respond to any nquiries that may be addressed to

"To make my story plain," said the lady, "I shall have to go back just a year—to January, 1893 It was then I began so feel bedly. There was nothing like what is commonly called an 'attack' of any practical disease. No. my troubles came on very much as summer changes into autumn. The trees were green, now they are brown; it was like that; no sharp symptoms, no sudden collaspe. It was fading and sinking down. All women will understand what that means.
"I felt tired, week and exhausted

No, it was not from overwork or worry. The life and strength seemed to be passing from mo, I couldn't tell why. To get up and down stairs was a hard task for me. I became so weak that on any exertion I would almost faint away. All my hopes of gaining strength by eating were failures. My appetite was fitful, and food distressed

"Perhaps I really ought to date my illness furtuer back than last January. I will give you the facts, and people can judge for themselves.

"My hasband and I have been mar-ried nine years. Before my marriage I was troubled a great deal with indrgestion and dyspepsia, and sometimes since. I would be well two or three months and sick two or three months, off and on. That was the history of several years—indeed, of many years. Four years ago I bad a serious time with that complaint, sleeping bally and suffering all the symptoms that are so much written about. I couldn't eat any solid food. I lived on boiled milk, taken hot, right off the stove. That was my diet, and I got very tire! of it; but I was afraid to touch any. thing else. I say I had years of this sort of thing, and possibly it may make what I sm going to tell you easier to understand, or it may not, However it is part of the truth.

"Now to get back to the year 1893, ast year, a long and sad one for me As the warm weather came on I hoped to get better, but did not. The open-ing buds on the trees out there in the park found me as weak, low and miserable as I had been in the winter. I was losing flesh and strength, slowly but surely, all the time. My nerves were feeble and shaken so that my sleep was habitually bad. During the warm nights of June I often left my bed and sat by the window and looked out When one can't sleep, almost any di version is better than to lie in bed waiting for the clock to let you know that another hour has dragged by. "Well there is no need to dwell on this part of my experience. I was running down, and nothing that could be uone here in Brooklyn appeared likely to help me. My relatives live in Peeks kill on the Hudson, and to them I went early in July, taking our three children and leaving my busband to attend to his work in New York and to take care of our home here.

"Peekskill lies on the hills, and, oh how fresh the air is ! It was in hope of benefit from that, and from the change of scene, that I went there. But I was destined to be dissappointed. The country, even with all the beauty and glory of summer upon it. was no bet er for me than the city. In the midst of it all I was the same weak and weary woman. The slightest ex-ertion tired me, and any continued effort made me taint. About the first of August I broke down altogether and took to my bed. When I entered my room I little thought it would be three long months before I should come out of it. Yet that was my fate. It was a dreary imprisonment, lightened only by what kind friends and the best of medical attention could effect. Now and then they got me up to have the bed made, and to rest me; but I couldn't

Yes, I took nourishment, of course, broths, soups, etc., and kept alive on them; but lost fl-sh just the same and got weaker—that is, if I could be any

"My friends saw I was growing thinner, and expressed the opinion to one another that I was in a decline. "The doctor suggested tust I take cod liver oil, but I told him I couldn't bear the looks or the taste of it, either in its natural state or as an emulsion. He looked grave at this but said no more about it. So I layed there and lingered and sank; that is all there is to say of the result of my trip to the

'Every time I went up to visit my wife," said Mr. Cook, "I could see she was much thinner and more feeble than before, although she didn't like to admit it,

"Well," continued the lady, "I must get home, and so on the 3rd of Novem-ber, they wrapped me up and brought mice cripple cares.

Take two eggs, also use a cupful of boiled rice, One pint of milk, one-half teaspoonful sait to make it nice. One heaping teaspoon baking powder use, and then you'll take Flour to make thin batter. Stir well and drugs—often useful to others—but of no use to me.

"On the next day after my return mended it and hoped I would try it. I tasted it and it tasted good, nothing like cod liver oil. I began taking it ac-cording to the directions without feeling the least confidence in it or indulging any hope from it. But it did have a good effect, and that quickly. It gave me an appetite.

"I could eat the old kinds of food, and they didn't distress mo. Then I began to get some strength. At the end of a week, to my surprise and delight, I found I had gained two pounds. At the end of the second week, two more And so on gaining two pounds Closing out the bal-"It is eight weeks now, and I weigh 114 poun is, just 16 more than when I came home. I can eat anything, have no pain, no cough, no headache, can run up and down stairs like a girl, and if there is any more disease about me I am not aware of it."

"And you think Paskola did all this for you, Mrs. Cook?"
"Certainly, if it didn't what did?" I have taken nothing else for over two months, and I am well, as you can see. I never felt so well, and like living, in ten years as I do now. I have just got back from a visit to Peekskill friends and they had no trouble to see the dif-

"It isn't my wife's increase in weight alone," remarked Mr. Cook; "but look at her! her strength! her enjoyment of herself! her bright spirits! She had none of those things till Paskola gave them to her. If it can do as much for other people, through her statement being published, why it ought to be pub-

"What my husband says," I say added Mrs. Cook; "anything less would be ingratitude on my part and culpable indifference of the suffering of others."

Has this case any lesson for you?

Are you thin? Are you famishing for food which the palate refuses and the stomach cannot digest? Are you pale from want of red blood? Are you cold because you have not flesh to feel the vital fire? Are you weak because your food is not assimil ted? Are you slowy sinking like a scuttled ship? Milions are. Abandon the use of drugs and medicines, and test the successful modern scientific treatment. Paskola a a food, and enables the system to use all other 1.1. The piecebag bulges at the sides, and the piecebox is filled to overflowing. Silk and wool, cotton and satin scraps have become mixed in a way that is simply exasperating. "Only the other day, sighs the worried housewife, "they were all put to rights. Suppose I do straighten them out again, how long will they stay so? The very next time I want a bit for mending Jack's trousers or Mollie's gown I shall have to rummage over the whole collection in order to see if the clipping

Along comes a handy woman, one of the sort-bless her!-who contrives to entangle the most perplexing of life's skeins without fretting or fuming. She says in Golden Days, "Try my piecebag methods," And she settles down to business. Carefully she snips from each cutting tiny samples, which she tacks one to another until she has secured a perfect list of what the bag, box or trunk contains. When the call comes for a certain piece of goods for mending purposes, all she has to do is to take her samples from the big envelope lying on the very top of the neatly rolled scraps, and running her eye over them determine without great trouble or delay whether the material she requires is at hand. If not, neither parcel nor roll need he disturbed. In this way the helter skelter treatment of the average collection may be avoided.

A showy and at the same time convenient and durable handbag is illustrated and described as follows by The
